CANDOUR The British Views-Letter

To defend national sovereignty against the menace of international finance

Vol XLIV No 10 Registered at the G.P.O. as a Newspaper October 1992

PAYING THE DUES

ROSINE de BOUNEVIALLE looks behind the present fuss, flurry and panic about the pound to identify the real causes of Britain's recurring financial crises.

THERE is an ancient joke about a doctor, a lawyer and a politician arguing about whose was the oldest profession. The doctor said his was because the creation of Eve from Adam's rib was a surgical operation. "No!" said the lawyer. "First, order was made out of chaos, and that is a legal arrangement." The politician merely said, "But who made the chaos?" After the assorted debacles engineered during the last seventy odd years, few people would quarrel with that claim, but there was one professional conspicuously absent from the debate. Had a banker been present, the politician would have been shown to be just another puppet piping his paymasters' tune.

Long-term Candour readers will recognise the Mellor-dramas staged last month as an updated version of the periodical plays re-issued for public confusion every decade or so. Who remembers what else was going on when Profumo, for instance, was in the scandal sheets? "The drastic attack which the Government has made on the British economy in the forlorn hope of 'saving' it with an international loan of £1,000,000,000 raised under the auspices of the International Bank, and hailed by The Times as a 'triumph for the Bank of England'..." That sounds like a misprint from last month's news media, but no: it is a quotation from an article by A.K. Chesterton, titled "The Dance of the Gnomes", in August 1966.

Currency Or Commodity?

Strange how August and September are the open season for war, both military and economic - or perhaps not so strange. For the contemporary government to fail as ignobly with the same objective (via the Bank of England), seven billion pounds was the price chalked up to the British taxpayers to "save the pound", which promptly fell out of the inaptly named Exchange Rate Mechanism causing panic stations in Whitehall. Interest rates went up and down like yoyos and the economy recessed even more rapidly than before; but not to worry. "The Bank of England won't lose money," said a pundit on Newsnight on 16th September. On the B.B.C. news next morning we were solemnly told, "It is all the fault of international currency speculators." Be sure, there was no one present to tell or even ask how currency - once a means of exchange - became a commodity at the mercy of any fairy gold tycoon with a fax machine.

Back to A.K. Chesterton in 1966: "References to the Gnomes of Zurich and to Continental Bankers do at least break the conspiracy of silence concerning the power of international finance - a conspiracy which the present writer's refusal to uphold has led him to be hounded for the greater part of his life. They have had one other remarkable effect in that they have brought home to a periodical as far to the Left as the New Statesman the necessity for a value which the present writer, almost alone among publicists, has stressed for the last several decades to the accompaniment of jeering critics - the value of national sovereignty.

Two Fallacies

"The New Statesman's opening sentences [on the subject], although they contain two fallacies, are not without promise of a change of approach. I quote them: 'It is a humiliating symptom of Britain's weakness that when the B.B.C. broadcasts the latest set of punishments the government has been forced to inflict on our economy, a Continental banker is invariably on hand to discuss whether or not the chastisement will satisfy foreign opinion. This is something to which Latin-American banana republics, and other indigent states, have long been accustomed. To Britain, the experience is new and hard to swallow. Yet in a way it brings us to the heart of our dilemma. Can we be both prosperous and sovereign?'

"The fallacies are at once apparent. Firstly the situation for Britain, so far from being 'new', has existed since 1917, when we borrowed our first £1,000,000,000 from the United States. Secondly, the question at the end does not bring us to the heart of the dilemma. The choice is not between one or the other, but between both or neither."

!917: what a fateful year that was! The Queen of Heaven herself produced the tremendous and terrible Miracle of the Sun at a place called Fatima in Portugal. Three peasant children retailed her message, one of whom still lives: "Pray for the conversion of Russia." If that was not done by the Pope in union with all the bishops of the Catholic Church, Communism would spread all over the world in wars and the woes of natural and unnatural disasters.

Speculation, Usury And Fraud

The conspiracy of silence concerning the power of International Finance extended like ice round the poles to conceal the absolute power of God Almighty. Whom the Devil will destroy he first makes mad. We have put our trust in the speculation, usury and long firm frauds conducted by the courtiers of the Prince of this World. Today all around us are the results of the almost universal neglect of Our Lady's warnings and the betrayals of the Faith that would, and still will, save us if we will only return to it. Nothing less will do. There will be no more warnings.

Anyone who saw the stunned expressions on the faces of Major and Lamont on television during the U-turn to beat all U-turns must have realised that those two poor fools had just been bludgeoned into seeing that at last the time of "gradual inevitability" is over: the financial ferry boat these cowards and careerists are supposedly steering is now stuck in the current streaming towards Niagara. All who are not stone deaf can now hear the roar of the falls, at the bottom of which there is nothing but the One World-pool.

NOEL HUNT comments on news from home and abroad

BRITISH and American voters share the delusion that their votes can elect anyone they choose, to do whatever they direct. Repeated proofs to the contrary seem unable to alter this touching faith in "democracy". As an example, take the current American presidential election. This is likely to be won by Bush. How can we be so sure? Easy: a little while ago it was announced that the U.S.A. would approve a loan to Israel of about five billion dollars to pay for the cost of housing recent immigrants from Russia. This loan is the price sought by American Zionists for supporting Bush's re-election. The election campaign will now change. Bush will be reported as the good guy, the one in the white hat. Anyone doubting this should ask himself who controls the communications media in the U.S.A? It is certain that, in one sense, the answer will not be W.A.S.P.ish!

There will be more and more favourable publicity for Bush, more and more unfavourable publicity for his rivals. Finally he will be acclaimed as the people's choice. Nobody will be allowed to suspect, still less to say aloud, that the choice was influenced by a tiny unrepresentative minority. The tactics do not change. When during World War I Britain needed all the help she could get, the Balfour Plan, approving the idea of a Zionist state in Palestine, secured the support of Zionist interests in America. Woodrow Wilson committed his forces to the British side, yet we rue the results today. When the U.S. presidential result is hailed as yet another triumph for democracy, remember that you first read the result, and how it was obtained, in this journal!

A RECENT article in the Daily Telegraph's "You & Your Family" section tells of a father's troubles with his daughter, aged four. He has read the books, he says, talked with experts, and done his best. His daughter is "a proper little madam, a four-year-old mini-monster." This bien pensant parent does not like "the emotional punishments, nor do I believe in violence". He ends by asking for advice. Here is some.

By letting the child know that violence will not be used, he guarantees further trouble. He has tried everything else, so why not give violence an innings? Tell the child that from now on things will be different. An order will be given and instant obedience expected. Of course the child is not being forced to obey, as should be made plain. She has a choice: instant obedience or three slaps on the bottom. Then order her to pick up a certain toy. If she fails to do so, beat her as promised. When the resulting tantrum is over - have a book handy to read for the duration - repeat the order and, if necessary, the beating. She will tire of it before you. When she obeys, make much of her, but give no physical reward. Be utterly impersonal and suddenly violent. She will soon learn. If you lack the resolution to do this, then prepare to suffer until at last she leaves home.

THE Press tells us that a majority wish for a referendum on the E.C. We are not told the question which the referendum would ask. Yet this is of vital importance. It is likely that the question will be on the lines of "Do you think the Maastricht Treaty should be ratified?" The Danish "no" killed the Treaty, if international undertakings mean anything. The Treaty can only be renegotiated, not ratified. The referendum would, therefore, be a complete waste of time and public money, even if government agreed to be bound by the result. What is really needed, if we have to have a referendum at all, is (a) an undertaking that the result of a referendum will be binding on government and (b) a question on the lines of "Do you think that Britain should quit the European Community?"

Do not ask nice Mr Major for this undertaking or for a referendum - he cannot say yea or nay. Put the requests to the unseen financiers who control all political parties, for that is where the power lies, not with national governments. [Better still, forget referenda and put the challenge direct to party politicians wherever they appear on platforms, in surgeries or at fetes: "Will you pledge unequivocally to campaign for Britain's withdrawal from the E.C. or are you prepared one day to suffer the fate of a traitor?" - Editor]

THE "Muslim Parliament" has called for the repeal of the Race Relations Acts and the abolition of the Commission for Racial Equality. They claim that these laws and this body do nothing for Muslims, while concentrating on black, feminist and homosexual issues. They have a point. The "Parliament" has been criticised as "extremist" on the ground that members are not elected. These same critics never voice any objection to the strident trumpeting of their views by unelected and often self-chosen "community spokesmen" from the ethnic minorities. The real objection, though never expressed, is that the "Parliament" opposes racial integration. Islam has no tradition of universal suffrage, democracy or equal opportunities. The "Parliament" satisfies the Muslims, who alone are concerned. Englishmen who have for so long suffered from the tyranny of the Race Relations Industry (practically the only "industry" not to contract in this time of recession!) and the mischievous activities of the Commission can wish the Muslim initiative only success.

Yet the Muslims are unlikely to be successful. G.K. Chesterton's "veiled prophet of finance", who controls both politicians and the media, is adamant that there shall be the elimination of all traits that might make the average Westerner less of an obedient serf under a world government. Miscegenation is thus essential to the plan. The expression of patriotic views, if a forum can be found, invites serious trouble from the Race Relations Gestapo, as Jane Birdwood, Colin Jordan and John Tyndall can testify, and universal condemnation from the great and the good. The enormous number of those with a vested interest in the perpetration of the existing system, allied to the very efficient liberal censorship, means that the Muslims are no more likely to carry their point than are the Anglo-Saxon majority.

Every politician knows this; none dare act on the knowledge lest he finds himself "spending more time with his family", as the saying goes. This is true, too, of workers in the media, of academics and of the business and professional classes. Those holding contrary views do so at their peril. The liberal totalitarian state is powerful, universal and unforgiving!

ABORTION: EVEN HUMAN BEINGS ARE DISPOSABLE

by HAVEN BRADFORD GOW

DOES an anti-life mentality permeate the United States today? How widespread is the practice of abortion in that country? What are the hidden physical and psychological risks of abortion?

To answer the question of whether many people in this country still consider human life sacred and a gift from God, we need to reflect on these abortion statistics: Every twenty seconds a baby is aborted. 180 abortions are done every hour. 4,320 are performed each day. 30,240 occur every week. 129,000 babies are aborted every month and every year the figures rises to 1,576,800.

Since the U.S. Supreme Court legalised abortion on demand in 1973, at least 26 million babies have died from legalised abortion. Forty per cent of women undergoing abortions already have procured at least one previous abortion; thirteen per cent have had two or more. Moreover, 120,000 late abortions (from the commencement of the fourth month to the end of the ninth month) are performed every year in the U.S.

Scarred Physically And Psychologically

Defenders of Roe v. Wade said the ruling would ensure that women could obtain safe, cheap and legal abortions; they insist that very few aborted women suffer from any physical or psychological damage. However, anti-abortion scholar David Reardon documents in his book Aborted Women: Silent No More (Loyola University Press) the pernicious physical and psychological effects aborted women have had to endure. For example, long-term complications occur in 20-50 per cent of all such women. Reproductive damage is highest for teenagers and women who have undergone their first pregnancy. Each year, more than 100,000 women suffer the loss of an unwanted baby due to complications resulting from latent abortion morbidity. Ninety per cent of aborted women experience moderate to severe emotional stress following abortion. Up to ten per cent require hospital or other professional treatment. Post-abortion stress increases the probability that a woman will become involved in a pattern of child abuse.

Clearly, an anti-life/anti-child mentality pervades society today. But why are so many women opting to kill their innocent, defenceless unborn babies?

Corollary Of The Throw-Away Society

One explanation for the pro-abortion mentality is that we live in an increasingly utilitarian society. Everything, it seems, has become easily disposable and easily replaced. Cars, cans, bottles, appliances, furniture, toys and books. Unhappily, this attitude that everything is easily disposable and easily replaced has come to permeate even our thinking about abortion. For too many, human beings also have become dispoable. This emphasis on utility goes hand in hand with a lifestyle that reduces moral choices to economic choices. Since it is cheaper to procure an abortion than to raise a child, many would rather kill their unborn babies than accept any economic burdens.

Even more basic explanations for abortion are selfishness and a lack of a sense of moral responsibility. For many, sex is simply a plaything or a tool to enhance one's popularity or to alleviate one's doubts about one's masculinity or femininity. Many crave sexual "freedom" but do not want to accept responsibility for their deeds. Abortion then becomes a quick, cheap, convenient and selfish solution to embarrasing pregnancies, and what results is the destruction of innocent unborn human lives.

THE TRUTH WILL OUT

DESPITE the frantic efforts of Communist and Zionist opponents to prevent the meeting taking place, David Irving's first autumn seminar was held in Central London on 13 September. The venom of the ANAL mob gathered outside must have intensified as soon as they realised that the guest speaker was none other than that indefatigable campaigner for truth, Ernst Zundel. We are informed by our special correspondent that Mr Zundel proved to be a very sincere and able speaker. He told of the years of frustration and near ruin he has endured in his efforts to publicise the truth about the "Holocaust". Like Jim Keegstra, Ernst Zundel has been on the griddle for nigh on ten years and has shown a commendable defiance in the face of the loud and vicious demands by Zionist pressure groups and conniving politicians for his imprisonment.

NO CHOICE FOR PATRIOTS?

LAST month we advertised the latest issue of Lady Birdwood's Choice broadsheet, which deals with the consequences of our continuing absorption in the European Community and the sinister forces that stand to benefit. In an obvious attempt to fly a kite for a further prosecution, the Independent newspaper's diarist quoted two of the more forceful passages from Choice and reminded readers that this was "very much the sort of stuff for which Birdwood [sic] was prosecuted last time." A Labour M.P., we were told, has already passed the brochure to the D.P.P. Jane Birdwood responded in defiant tone: "Someone's got to stand up, and I don't have access to the media because of the Jewish grip on it." THE RED THREAD

THE Bilderberg world government project, sponsored by David Rockefeller, is the culmination of a conspiracy hatched in Babylon 2,500 years ago. The story of the conspiracy, from its origins to its end according to St Paul, is told briefly in The Red Thread by Andrei Krylienko. It will be published in two parts, costing £10. Part I will be mailed on receipt of payment and Part II before the end of the year. Please send payment by international postal order to Civilta, Bischof Faber Platz 6A/10, 1180 Wien, Austria.

Read SPEARHEAD. Edited by John Tyndall and published in support of the British National Party. Sample copy 90p or annual subscription £11 from P.O. Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW.

THE DISTRIBUTIST LEAGUE

THE Distributist League has been formed to provide people in the Third Position and then people in the wider patriotic community, who wish to set up their own business, with the possibility to do so outside the slavery of usury. The philosophy behind the League is the one outlined by G.K. Chesterton, Hilaire Belloc and other Distributists. Its purpose is to recreate order where disorder and exploitation are dominant, to give individuals and their families freedom from debt and the rights of ownership where now the state, big business and the banks monopolise.

It is necessary to build trust and solidarity first among people in the movement, then among people in the community, where greed and envy are commonplace. Evil in society is producing itself through a chain, the links of which include moral, economic and political issues. Abortion and the destruction of the family are often a result of economic exploitation and usury. If we are to win we have to break this chain.

The Distributist League Scheme

This comprises two parts: 1. economic help, 2. marketing and advice.

A proposer first sets out his plan for a business. The business has to be morally and politically acceptable. This plan is presented to the Distributist League, which is made up of people who already have businesses and are in the movement, for advice and consideration. Among the conditions for the acceptance of the plan are the viability and substance of the business. It must have the potential to produce more than £2,000 a year after expenses.

If the plan is accepted, the proposer then receives up to a maximum (at present) of £500 from the Distributist League. This can be in various amounts, e.g. ten weeks at £50 or £250 to begin and then five weeks at £50. The proposer has first signed an agreement which commits him/her to spend at least thirty hours a week for ten weeks (of course, this is a minimum and many more hours may be needed!) to ensure the success of the enterprise.

If the business is successful, the proposer repays the loan without interest over an agreed period of time and then makes a donation of £50 to the Distributist League, thereby joining the scheme and giving others the same chance he has had. If the enterprise is not successful, the proposer will be given sufficient time to pay back the loan, but repaid it must be. All the businesses in the League will help each other and will provide services to each other at cheaper rates than usual.

This is the theory, so what about the practice? Already more than twenty individuals have donated £50 each to the Distributist League in the three months since the scheme was launched. The League is funding and helping with advice two new businesses, one in Ulster and the other in Shropshire. Several more applications are being considered.

Are you prepared to help get these new businesses going now and not in months or years? If you are prepared to help young family men and women free themselves from the vicious circle of usury and the endless bureaucracy of the banks, please send your donation of £50 to the Distributist League. If you prefer, this could be in the form of two donations of £25 over a month or so. Those who help the Distributist League put ideas into more action will be sent reports on progress and new initiatives as they happen. Please make cheques payable to THE DISTRIBUTIST LEAGUE and send them to BCM ITP, LONDON WC1N 3XX.

EMERGENCY AID FOR CROATIA

CANDOUR readers will not have failed to notice how much attention is being focussed by the media on the Muslim victims of Serb Communist aggression, and will have compared it to the degree of attention paid to the Catholic Croats when Vucovar and other cities, towns and villages were being destroyed, house by house and church by church, with horrific loss of life. With winter now setting in the suffering is increasing, not decreasing, simply because the world's media is pointing its cameras in another direction.

The peoples of Europe must help each other and by so doing show the politicians, the bureaucrats and the financiers in their true light. The Emergency Aid For Croatia Committee seeks to help those suffering and by so doing to push the chisel further into one of the many cracks in the armour of the New World Order. Readers responded very generously to the Emergency Aid For Croatia appeal in the June issue of Candour and the organisers would like to express their sincere appreciation to all concerned.

EMERGENCY AID FOR CROATIA

We know that in the heart of Europe a war of barbaric intensity is being waged against the people of Croatia, by the Communist Serbians. When the fighting stops, eventually, many of the problems will only be beginning.

"- physical and psychological consequences
- the lowering of general resistance to disease and illness
- premature births, less birth weight, etc.
- wounds that are being or will be inflicted because of the excessive circulation of arms before and during the war, as well as the injuries from unexploded projectiles that will be a source of danger after the war."

(Quote from the Institute for Mother and Child Health - Zagreb, 5/12/92.)

Already food, clothing and medical supplies have been sent from France, Italy and even Lithuania. Now EMERGENCY AID FOR CROATIA will be taking desperately needed medical supplies to the areas where it is most urgently required, from the British Isles.

HOW YOU CAN HELP.....

* Individual Donations; All those who donate £25 or more will receive a video of the supplies being delivered and an exclusive update from Croatia.
* Schools; If you are a teacher, governer or parent we can supply videos and display materials so that you can raise funds at your school.
* Involve Parents and Children; A special video will be made so that the schools involved can see the results of their fundraising at the children's clinic in Zagreb and elsewhere.

Please complete the relevant form below and send it back to us immediately. You know how desperate the situation is.
